One of the many hundreds of streams which come down from the mountain and flow through the countryside is this one near the Inglewood-Lepperton highway which reaches the sea at the bottom of the Māhoetahi road.

OUR COVER

This gives some idea of the decor at the new Wine and Dine restaurant, the La Scala, in New Plymouth. On entering this magnificent place, one has to cross a bridge over a stream that has goldfish, plus, at one end, a waterfall. Here to add charm is Rosemarie Insull, the perfect model in a perfect setting.

BACK COVER

Always a colourful sight on a fine day is the Port of Taranaki, especially when the port is full of overseas ships as it was when this photograph was taken recently.

New Plymouth Anzac Parade

Pukekura Park was well filled for the annual Anzac service and parade, during which a nasty shower had a dampening effect on those taking part. It was as colourful as ever, but with the ranks of the older war veterans gradually dwindling in numbers.

Left: The complete parade stands at the service in the park.

Sheiks And Harems

Unbelievable....sheiks in New Plymouth and harems....brrrr, in this weather too. As you can see by the pictures on this page, taken by Henry McGee at the Ngamotu Road Hall, there seemed to be plenty of sheiks for the harem girls. It was, in fact, one girl to each sheik. It was a night of fun, and dancing, sheik to sheik possibly. The costumes were superb, the atmosphere ideal, and a good time was had by all.

Anzac Service At Eltham

Only a fair number of the local population attended the Anzac ceremony at the school gates on Anzac morning. Ex-servicemen were there in force, as were the older folk, and the Scouts and Guides, but it was the teenagers who were conspicuous by their absence. After fifty years, is the true meaning of Anzac being forgotten by the younger generation? We think it will be, as fewer people attend these celebrations. Above: Wreath-bearers at the parade. Below: Ex-service personnel with Guides and Scouts at the ceremony.

Elephant Race In Devon Street

Hawera Anzac Parade

Rain was probably responsible for the small gathering that attended the Hawera Anzac service and parade. It was a cold and miserable day, but despite this, those taking part in the parade played their part in these poor conditions. Above: The regular force contributed much to the parade, are shown here heading the march-past. Below: Veterans of the Second World War have never forgotten how to march well. Bottom: First World War veterans headed the parade after the regular force.

N.P. Savages Greet Waikato Orphans

The New Plymouth Savage Club was host to a raiding force from the Waikato Orphans club recently. The lads from the Mooloo country, though small in number, made up for it with the quality of the entertainment which they provided at a concert following the parade. Above: The Orphans pull their chief through the streets to the War Memorial Hall, where they were accorded a civic Savage welcome. Below: Here's some of the defenders of the city, preparing to meet the invaders from the Waikato. Bottom: A long speech from scattered notes was made on behalf of the Savages of the city by Fraser Stevenson, accompanied by the inevitable Snow Vinsens.

Tom Sawyer ... By Special Request

We owe apologies to many for our failure to publish pictures of the Tom Sawyer show at the Bowl of Brooklands. We have had dozens of requests both by mail and phone to publish something of this. Our reason for missing the show was that with virtually only one photographer, it is sometimes hard to cover everything that is taking place. On this occasion, however, we were out of town. We were fortunate enough to borrow some negatives of the show, and produce them here.

George Ryan, musical director.

Principal characters: David Barnard as Tom and Lynette Sanders as Beckie.

With ideal costuming, the children enjoyed the show as much as the audience.

Part of the show that had everything

First half choir performed in the best tradition

Scenery and staging were perfect

American songs performed and sung by many voices under the musical directorship of George Ryan. A long-play record has been made of this show, and will be available soon. Orders to the Headmaster of the school, Mr Bruce.

7000 Watch Stock Car Spills And Thrills

Here's something that's pulling in the crowds at the Stratford Showgrounds. Stock car racing, the latest craze, is proving to be one of the most popular sports in the district. Crowds of up to 7000 have watched these meetings, enabling the club to start the 1966 season in a sound financial position. It is hoped that during the closed season, lights will be installed at the showgrounds so that night meetings can be held next year. We must admit that this sport is at least spectacular. After each race, the track looks like a scrap dealer's yard, with cars by the dozen battered, broken and upside-down all over the place. Seems that this is what the public likes, because the patrons are not all the young folk; the oldies too, like this sport. And for the record the first season, just completed, has a clean sheet as far as injuries go.

Two down, and another about to go down and out.

St. John men look for a customer....

...but he climbed out unhurt

One of the rules is that the driver must stay put!

Half way through the race the track takes on the look of a scrap dealer's yard.
